Property

Set in the heart of Shelfanger, this distinctive Grade II Listed property five-bedroom cottage is steeped in history and full of character. Thought to date back to the early 17th century, it retains much of its original charm, with a roughcast timber-frame beneath a steep pantile roof, complete with gabled ends. A central brick chimney stack anchors the home, while two gabled dormer windows add to its period appeal. Inside, the property offers a wealth of original features, beginning with two generously sized reception rooms, each offer the focal point of an impressive inglenook fireplace housing a wood-burning stove. The kitchen is a true heart-of-the-home space, with room for a dining table and a traditional Rayburn nestled into a handsome brick surround. A separate dining area provides a more formal setting, while a study offers a quiet retreat for work. A downstairs bathroom and a further shower room add practicality, a spiral staircase leads to a secluded bedroom, ideal for guests or a private hideaway. Upstairs, via a separate staircase to the rear of the house, four further proportioned bedrooms complete the accommodation. The property benefitted from two extensions over the years, the first being the kitchen extension in 1970 and then later a front extension in 1982.
